THE SCIENCE OF TAILORING. The science of tailoring does not consist in giving a short man a style that only becomes tail men, or vice versa. Science consists of an innate perception of the "eternal fitness of thinge"—of sizing a man up carefully and fitting him in the most becoming style. "Keen" is very careful of this point of suitableness and takes his measurements accordingly. Your clothes should be becoming to you—a part of yourself, as it were. This in substance is the science of fitting. Then there is the science of making, putting a samment together so that it will set right—seams made flat and not crinkled—lining to correspond exactly with the garment (no wrinkles)—sewing buttons on strong—hand-working the button on strong—hand-working the button holes—and a thousand other little things that go to make Keen's tailoring superior.

Did it ever strike you as strange that readymade clothiers are continually referring to sense, not of change in principle or policy, but of perfecting the management and methods, has already been taken up seriously by leading republicans, and correspondence looking to the strengthening of the organization has already begun. A permanent organization, with workers who will keep up the work all the year around and every year, instead of trying to do the work of four years in the few months before a presidential election, is what is aimed at.

There is some difference of opinion among republicans as to the policy to be followed, but the idea seems to prevail that the "force bill" question must be forever put aside and that is a report that he is going to get one of the vacant foreign missions, instead of an appoint-ment as assistant secretary of the treasury, as has been suggested.

Speaking with a Stan reporter this morning
Mr. Coon said that he thought the trouble with his party, when they attempted to establish a strong permanent organization for campaig work would be that they could not get suff cient money. In any reorganization and adjust-ment of the lines of the party he looked for no ment of the lines of the party he looked for no change of principle, but thought there might be some concessions on the tariff so as to prevent the letter of the Mc-Kinley law being taken as the platform of the party. He put aside the talk of his going into the cabinet as a thing not to be discussed at all. Speaking of the prospects of an extra session, went into the question a little more fully than he has in interviews heretofore. He said that it was absolutely impossible to say now whether or not there would be an extra session. It would all depend upon conditions not yet developed and which in the nature of things heads, binffs and property. The big iron pier developed and which in the nature of things could not develop until later on. He had seen Mr. Cleveland before leaving New York and was satisfied that it was not possible for him to tell yet what would be done.

"If there is an extra session," he said, "it will probably not meet until late in the fall. It depends on circumstances. The tariff alone will not furnish sufficient reason for an extra session. The financial affairs of the government may be in such shape as to make an extra session imperative. It appears probable that we shall find that there is not enough money in the treasury for the needs of the government. There is a situation in the treasury which every thoughtful man who has considered the matter has foreseen. There is an accumulation of deficiencies and obligations that have been contracted and will come over to us.

"It may be that this situation will furnish reason enough why an extra session should be called. We shall have to see what Congress does at this session. If they do not repeal the Sherman law relating to the purchase of silver and take such other action as the situation demands we may be swamped. Upon these things depend the calling of an extra session."
